Iraqi President Jalal Talabani, a vocal opponent of capital punishment, has refused to sign the first death warrants issued since the ousting of former dictator Saddam Hussein more than two years ago. "Talabani delegated Vice-President Adel Abdel Mehdi to sign a decree... which approves the execution of three convicts," his office said on August 17. Prime Minister Ibrahim Jaafari had announced the day before that Talabani had signed the death warrants for the three Al-Qaeda linked men convicted of kidnapping and killing policemen and raping women. During Saddam's regime common criminals used to be hanged, while disloyal soldiers faced a firing squad.
