USAID

If your post has a USAID office, ask if you can have a listing of their implementing partners, i.e., those NGOs, organizations, and companies that contract with USAID to complete work in Democracy, Economic Opportunities, Health, Environment, Alternative Development, Food Security, Justice Sector Reform, Disaster Relief, and other areas of development. Contacting those implementing partners can prove successful in identifying work opportunities. One can locate country-specific information on the USAID website at www.usaid.gov/where-we-work.

International Foundations and Trusts

Family members interested in monies for the implementation of project work might want to apply to for a grant from an international foundation. Many Foreign Service spouses/partners over the years have been successful in funding their individual projects in this way. Much of the following information was taken from the Foundation Center website.

- The Foundation Center – www.fdncenter.org
Located in Washington, DC, the Foundation Center's grants database is an excellent source of information on foundations operating in locations around the world. One can also register to

PRO-BONO Consulting

Providing technical assistance (donating your skills and knowledge) to an organization “pro-bono” can lead to future employment, if one finds the right opportunities. Determine, from the start, the duration of time you wish to provide your “pro-bono” expertise to an organization, without pay, before committing to an arrangement. You may also consider listing these accomplishments on your resume as Pro-Bono Consulting.

Pro-bono opportunities include (for example):

- Providing technical assistance to NGOs and international organizations (web design, data collection, editing and proposal work)
- Building houses with Habitat for Humanity
- Serving as election observers
- Local orphanages (fundraising, financial tracking, clothing drives)
